DEATH. On the 6th Oct., at his residence, Lewisham THE MARINE COURT OF ENQUIRY OF Park, FREDERICK MAY HARSANT, Esq., deeply regretted.

The Paily Press.

HONORONG, NOVEMBER 24rt, 1873.

In is to be regretted that the large bulk of the information which we have about China, is kong. derived only to a very moderate extent from the personal knowledge of those who supply it. The works hitherto published on China, able is they undoubtedly are, in many respects, fail to convey a truthful picture of the nature too much at explaining it from theoretical ciples as set forth in the Chinese Classics, and as enunciated by the official better educated natives, all more or less interested in making the government of their country appear in the most favourable light. The theory of government in China differs so widely from its practice, that any conclusions derived exclusively from the former must necessarily be in a great measure deceptive. This fact has, indeed, been felt by all writers on China, and a very superficial acquaintance with the works which have been published must show any ordinarily thoughtful reader that, throughout them there is a tendency, rather to explain away inconsistencies, than to demonstrate from facts what is the nature of the government actually existent in the country.

Mr. Wade, who may be considered one of the best authorities on Chinese matters, once observed that China presented the strange spectacle of a nation whose Government is, in theory, the most autocratic, and in practice, the most democratic of any in the world —a remark borne, out by the statements of other good authorities. The explanation of the apparent anomaly is, however, more simple than is generally supposed. It sonsists in the fact that the one form of government is imaginary, and the other real. Court's finding on this head would have been The question is: Is the attorney properly re-The Chinese, with that love of antiquity and veneration for precedent, which form so distinguishing a characteristic of the nation, have kept up the theory of a paternal system, while they have found in practice the necessity of departing from it. The complete subordination of the higher officials to the Supreme Authority, of the lower officials to those above them, and of the people to all authorities has now-as would, indeed, appear to have been the case for a length of years-no more existence than the kingly power, such as it was in the time of the Normans, has in England at the present day. In China, as is the case everywhere, the popular element has been in antagonism to the governing element. To such an extent has the latter succeeded in asserting itself that, as observed by Mr. WADE, there is in practice no country so democratic as China. But it must be observed that this "democracy" is not of a kind to attract the admiration even of those who lean towards a Republican form of Government, but may be most accurately described as the perpetrated existence of that state of Society verging upon anarchy, at which in Western countries the necessity for protection causes the extreme of democracy to touch upon Imperialism, and in the majority of instances, to become transmuted into a monarchical form of government. .

Such are the conclusions to which any impartial observer of the facts existing in China must arrive; and, however much these facts conflict with the theory of government as set forth in books, they are all upon which those who wish to become really acquainted with the nature of the country and of its administration, or even to form just views of passing political events, can rely. We do not deny the importance of an acquaintance with the literature of the Chinese, but so far as a knowledge of the true state of affairs in the country is concerned, it is important rather as affording an index to the mind of the Chinese, and as showing the theories upon which they rely, than as indicative of the manner in which the government of the country is actually carried on.

CONVERTING THE MOORS:

There is an excellent story told of a missionary who was bent on converting the Moors to Protestantism. But as he knew no Arabic, and not one Muor out of a handred in Taugier knows five words of English, or one out of twenty sufficient Spanish to comprehend a sermon in that tongue, the missionary was obliged to engage the services of a well known Jew, a worthy descendant of his forefathers, to expound and explain to the Moors, by means of verbal translations, the tidings which he came to impart. This Jew, Benoni by name, willingly undertook the duty, with the accompanying amolument, but informed his employer that it was the oustom of the country, on the occasion of any sort of gathering, for the promoters to offer refreshment, in the shape of coffee, to all who might have assembled to listen to thom. Wishing to make things pleasant, the missionary readily assented, and gave a large order for coffee to be ready at a certain time Then commenced the sermon, which was of the usual order of such discourses: -Benoni's translation, however, is worth repeating, for that was indeed quite novel. The preacher, after each impressive sextence, made a pause, when Benomi, with an exact imitation of the worthy man's style, performed his duty of interpreter by addressing the people thus in Arabio:-"This is an Englishman, who has come to talk to you. Listen to him; and when he has done he will give you coffee." (Missionary again.) -" He is a madman. What he is saying is al nonsauve : Lut when le is done he will give you coffee." (Missionary again.) - Donnt fear, There is no harm in what he says, and when he is done you shall all have coffee." (Missionary again.) -He is not a magician, he is only a poor English madman. What he says can hurt no one, and he has ordered an abundance of coffee." (Missionary again.)-" Have pationce, it will soon be over now. He is getting tired, and then every one can drink as much as he likes of coffee." And so on to the end of the discourse. The missionary was perfectly satisfied with the attention with which be had been listened to, which he considered evinced a remarkable readiness on the part of the poor benighted Moslems to be instructed in the truths of Christianity. The Moore, to whom it was no trial to sit for an hour listening to what they did not understand a word of, were also perfectly satisfied with the "mudman's" coffee, of which they partook to their hearts' content. Benoni ponketed his fee, and TOUSE, SHIP, AND STEAMBOAT no doubt satisfied his conscience with the reflection that his mode of translation was much the safest and pleasantest for all parties, A more correct interpretation might have made it fare ill both for preacher and interpreter .-

There is a great tendency to exaggerate the more sensational elements of the American panic, and to elevate what were really secondary accidents into the main cause of the catastrophe. It is quite true that there have beenassociations of "Bears," who wished to lower the value of securities; that these associations were very successful; that the fall in the prices of securities which followed their efforts ruined many; and it is also true that the comparative smallness of the quantity of money at New York and the great number of securities which are there held upon borrowed money make that market exceedingly sensitive, and give such combinations at times a power in it which they Arbrouth. do not elsewhere possess. But, nevertbeless, if a system of banking is really sound, combinations of stockbrokers will never ruin it. There is a substantial power in real money which has always defied, and will always defy, the worst assaults of depreciating speculators.

The fundamental cause of the New York. panie was the peculiar combination of inconvertible Government paper and of Government. interference in the trade of banking which wo mentioned last week, and which we now describe elsewhere. This is a constant cause of augmenting weakness, from which the credit system at New York has long been suffering, and which, from its nature, was sure to break it down. But chronic causes of this kind are always sided in their action by minor and momentary influences, and so it has been here: There has been a buge speculation in railways at New York and in other cities of America which has been very beneficial to the country, because it has covered its surface with railways, which eventually will probably pay, and which are sure to be very beneficial to the districts in which they lie, whether they plus or not. But to the finance market this great and sudden creation of railways has not been equally advantageous. An unusually large amount of railway stock is held in New York on borrowed money, and this has made the market even more sensitive that usual, sensitive as it commonly is. It is certain thatthe firms which bave failed were deeply engaged in this railway speculation, and it has been believed that many other banks have advanced more kirgely on rallway securities than they ought. And this has stimulated the panic against them. But if they had retained a good banking reserve, and had used it freely, they, would in all likelihood, have suffered no roal danger, and would have -readily surmounted alarm. But this reserve they did not possess, and their present banking law, though it requires them to keep it, makes that keeping all but impossible, and renders it quite impossible for them at time of need to Too much attention cannot be paid to the ourrency and banking laws of the Uni ed States at this moment, because they are, in truck, a chronic source of weakness, from which I ambard-street is always exposed to injury. So long as these laws continue to be what they are, Saigon and Penang. we shall always be liable to suffer fro a a panie in America, just as we are now enflering; and it will be impossible for any one, even for above-mentioned Ports. Americans themselves, to predict precisely when the calamity will occur. Where the system of currency and of banking is bad credit will be habitually unsound, and when it is onsound any breath may hart it, and no one can tell beforehand when the breath will come. Until the United States resume specie payments, until the Banks keep a sufficient reserve of that specie against panics, and until they | 1 inform the public that his Shop has been learn to lend that reserve boldly and liberally established since 1855, at Endicott's Lane, and - in an incipient panic, we shall always be liable that he has always a great quantity of BEST to suffer from such violent disruptions of COAL in store for sale. THE LITTLE HAND. MUS. HONORIA MARSHALL. That hand of thine, my precious child, ' How oft its soft caress I woo. And ask, with many a bope and four. What is that little hand to do? How ductile, soft, unworn by toil; The ready instrument of play, It executes the funcies quaint. That makes thy life one holiday. It rolls the ball, it guides the pen, And ciphers strange our deftly trace, And oft, with warm affection's gust, It londly strokes my careworn face. The mimic arms it well one wield, And rein thy small and steady steed, And when we con the lettered page, Points to the tiny words we read. And in thy parents' hands 'tis clasped And pillows oft thy rosy cheek When slumbers spell is on thee laid. "I will not be always thus, my boy, For real life has other tasks-What is that little hand to do?. Once more thy yearning mother asks. Is it to guide the seaman's belm. Or point the gun 'mid flashing swords'; And clothe thy thoughts in living words Will it be hard and worn with toil? or pale with sickness' fivid hae? Oh! could thy mother's heart divine What is that little band to do! But might her forvent prayer prevail, Unsullied should that hand remain-Clean from corruption's sinful touch. And pure from every sinful stain, Still ready for thy master's work, The servant of a willing mind. More prompt to give than to receive, And grasped in many a greeting kind. "It is a curious setout from first to last, as seen by English eyes. Every girl who is not very particular has her regular "spoon," her male property, with whom she takes the air, parades at tea-fights and flower-shows, the theatre, promenados. and church, and used generally as an object with which to inspire eavy in the breasts of those unwise virgins who have neglected to secure such furniture to their own especial use. These last are seen basely stulking with younger sisters, or, O ignominy! actually hiding under the shadow of their mothers' wings. But that is a rare sight indeed, for 20 per cent. it is a curious fact that Jersey papas and mammas are conspicuous by their absence; and though we are bound to believe they exist somewhere, still one is tempted to think they are covered up like the satin chairs in a parvenu's drawing-room, and only visible on state occasions. I have seen them at balls sitting in virtuous ranks against the wall, patient martyrs, sighing for the supreme hour of supper, but never with their daughters besides them, unless the latter were hopeless wall-flowers. Jersey is great at scandal: five-o'clock tea is the hour most sacred to its rites. This island is not liberal in its entertainments, but a banquet of thin bread-andbutter and rather weak tea is spread at some house or other all the week through, and any friend can go who likes. Then a reputation is sworn away between sips of bobea, and the latest elepement, fiascos, and matrimonial successes are critically discussed. Notes are compared about Miss Nobody's paint; it is decided to a day when Captain Somebody and Mrs. Anybody are going to clope; and it is related how and why Mr. Blank threw over Miss Dash, having positively refused

her hand three times, and many stories follow which it would ill become me to repeat!

But then no one has any character in Jersey:

it was talked to shreds long ugo; and as everybody is in the same plight, it would be ridiculous to complain of a common ill.-

CUSTOMS OF THE ASHANTEES. The costume of a chief or captain has been described as consisting of a vast double plume of eagles' feathers, surmounting a sort of belmet made of rams' horns gilt in a spiral pattern, and tied under his chin by a strap covered with the small shells called "cowries."
